

Making the hybrid work “work”

Pre-pandemic, those who were together in the office had the advantage. Covid leveled the playing field, but the ability to easily brainstorm and ideate as a team diminished. The question most are asking is in this hybrid workplace, how do we help people fully participate and feel included in meetings? Here is how you can embrace hybrid work.

Enable collaborative ideation

Design for people not in the room and make them seen, heard, and participate – from anywhere and from any device

93%

of today’s meeting rooms are equipped with only minimal technology to support information sharing

Improve work life boundaries

Combat digital exhaustion and create new team norms – such as “no-meeting” Fridays or using the “delay delivery” feature in Outlook

Personal wellbeing and mental health were the top 2 reasons for employees to leave their job in 2021

Drive social connections & support

Prioritize time for relationship-building and act as dot connectors, especially with remote and newly onboarded employees to foster bond of respondents say they are more likely to put family and personal life over work.

47%

Provide reliable network and purpose-built equipment

Enable higher-quality A/V experiences to enable people not in the room get lifelike experiences of workers would use video conferencing more if their huddle rooms were better equipped

63%

Transform office spaces and furniture

Create a sense of parity among virtual and in-person participants – with improved carpeting and seating to make at-office sessions more comfortable of the workforce wants changes to make work environments safer.

97%

Perception of non-verbal interactions and cues

Leverage all the tools and techniques to maximize interaction and strong facilitation in meetings of people managers say leadership at their company is out of touch with employees.

54%
